In this tutorial, we're going to create an awesome portrait makeup! There are many stages in this image, and we'll show how to quickly create each. Start by creating a new document (File > New > Document). The next stage involves painting in details on this portrait. We're going to start with an old fashion blue eyeshadow. To create the blue eyeshadow layer, select the Paint Bucket Tool (it looks like a paint bucket) and then click on one of the eyes on the image to draw the line. We want the line to be thick because the outline of the eyeshadow should be very noticeable. Fill the Stroke Box with the color you'd like. The next step is to paint in the beard. To do this, select the Brush Tool (shortcut: B) and then select a brush with a soft round brush. To create the shape of the beard, you can use the Polygonal Lasso Tool (shortcut: L) to select a few lines and drag them around the image. Once you have the shape you want, fill it in with the color you want. Next, select the Eraser Tool (shortcut: E) and click on the hair so that it's highlighted. Grab the Eraser Tool and click on the hair on the image to start erasing. Once you've erased the hair, it's time to start painting with the Paint Bucket Tool. To start painting with the Paint Bucket Tool, select the Paint Bucket Tool (shortcut: P) and click on the nearest eye on the image. Begin to paint in the eye with the paint bucket. We're going to start using a color variation from the blue eyed makeup brush for this. We have a similar brush for the base and the shadow. You can just use a combination of the brushes that are already on your brush palette. Next, paint in the rest of the eyes by using the paint bucket tool. Once you've finished, highlight the skin with a combination of a soft brush and a dark soft brush. Using the Eraser Tool, erase all the lines that you painted. This will give the face a smooth appearance. Next, apply some makeup. We're going to use blush, which is found in the Makeup Palette. To apply the blush to the skin, select the Brush Tool and select a brush like you did when you painted

Q: Can anything created by someone with divine powers be used in spell creation? Per the rules I can find here on creating a spell: 5th-level Wizard spells Wizards of the College of Wizardry can usually create single spells. To create a spell of 3rd level or lower, a wizard must expend 20 points of wisdom as well as 3 points for each spell level he attempts to create. This is his chance to commit his free time to the creation of magical artifacts, spells, or ethereal creatures. To create a spell of 4th level or higher, a wizard must also expend a point of his spellcasting ability bonus per spell level. This is how he dedicates himself to the creation of such spells. A wizard can create a set of one or more spells and can cast those spells concurrently. This is known as a spellbook. So, to create a spell, a 5th level Wizard must expend Wisdom as well as "a point for each spell level he attempts to create". Question: Can anything created by someone with divine powers be used in spell creation? Is there any precedent for this? For example, if the Eidolon of Corellon Larethian is 6th level and created as such (for example), can it be used to create spells? A: There is precedent, in fact. The players manual for 13th Age goes into detail on this. A DM may choose to allow you to use the divine portion of a stat block from a deity to create a spell, but you must meet its prerequisites to be allowed to do so. Creating a Spell Creating a spell is as easy as picking a school, level, and number of charges. You do not need any arcane or divine ingredients to make a spell, nor do you need any spellcasting ability for the purpose. A wizard need only expend his wisdom to create a spell. A cleric can use Wisdom, Intelligence, or Charisma in place of his spellcasting ability modifier to create spells. You can create spells using materials you have on hand, such as herbs, parchments, ink, and paper, but you will need to possess some of the following items: A well-thumbed tome you can use to memorize your spells. An unlimited amount of symbols, provided by your patron. A flask of holy
