
The Da Vinci Code is one of the most popular films ever, made in 2006 by Ron Howard. The story is about a murder mystery with many twists and turns. It's based on the novel of the same name which was written by Dan Brown, who also directed it. This movie tells the story of Robert Langdon who must solve a murder mystery involving ancient symbols and secret societies alike to find out who killed Jacques Saunière, curator at the Louvre museum; after receiving threats from various people, including those within his own government and religion as well as those outside society altogether. His search leads him to follow the trail of clues that Saunière left behind in hopes to decipher them and solve the mystery. He is accompanied by an historian named Sophie Neveu, who also has her own role in this story. When moviegoers saw this movie, it was a huge hit. It grossed $217,413,629 at the box office and earned a rating of 27% on Rotten Tomatoes and a 44 out of 100 on Metacritic which means it was "mixed or average reviews". The film has received mixed reviews from the public. Some of the reviews given were "It's a brainless, boring, and completely unnecessary bore that insults one's intelligence", "a tedious hybrid of quasi-religious thriller and pseudo-science fantasy". However there were some positive reviews as well. "While it may seem like a popcorn flick, it actually tackles some profound issues surrounding faith. It's an intriguing story that is very well-told." The movie was also accused of being anti-Christian in nature due to its premise that Jesus Christ married Mary Magdalene who gave birth to his child. This has caused outrage in the Catholic Church and most Christian churches. Some protests occurred outside theaters and some Christian denominations even boycotted the film. This only helped the film's popularity and made it even more popular than it already was with secular audiences This movie is not rated and does not have a rating on imdb.com The Da Vinci Code is one of the most popular films ever, made in 2006 by Ron Howard.
